The Elite Laundry is fortunate in securing the services of Mr. J. R. Pruett as general manager, who has purchased the interests of Mr. Geo. W. Mitchell, the retiring president and general manager. Mr. Pruett has recently been discharged from the service after a long period at the front.

Mr. Mitchell, who is now retiring and who has been the general manager for the past four years, held a very enviable position. Everyone knows that the only work that gives true satisfaction is that which shows evidence of results when it is completed—otherwise, it is a mere duty and burdensome.

The pride of achievement—the satisfaction of accomplishing that for which we work are the ends to which we all strive. Less than efficiency may content one of a patient and submissive spirit, but not so with Mr. Mitchell and the business management of the Elite Laundry Co. The atmosphere that one instantly feels upon entering this plant is that of action and industry—to attain, to do, to succeed and to get results. Even now Mr. Pruett is working out a system to make for more efficiency and greater economy in the mechanical end.

One has but to visit this modern and up-to-date laundry (and visitors are always welcome) see the modern rest room and other accommodations for employees, and to watch the laundering process from the time the soiled garments enter the first cold water depostory and are gradually brought to a boil, to the time they are deposited in the assorting room, after ironing, to appreciate the statement that Mr. Mitchell's work during his four years' management is to be envied. One notices the contrast in the appearance of the garments from the time they are a soiled and limp bundle to the finishing process which produces a starched and ironed garment—white as snow.

This excellent laundry service is what Mr. Mitchell has spent four years perfecting and its surprising effectiveness in "treating your clothes white" represents a service that every patron of the Elite Laundry has come to expect and that Mr. Pruett and his force will maintain.

This excellent service represents an enviable achievement—it does—and more, it represents years of conscientious devotion to the perfection of a progressive business policy—and for that reason the management of the Elite Laundry is to be congratulated for having had the services of Mr. Mitchell and for having been so fortunate as to secure Mr. Pruett as general manager.
